

TOO EARLY FOR OPEN CARS.—A lady who is obliged to travel daily over the line of the Metropolitan Railway Company, complains bitterly of the open cars which the company has been using of late. She says the last two mornings have been foggy, and she is just recovering from a severe attack of la grippe, brought on, perhaps, by open cars. She has to take the car at a certain hour, and for two mornings let one pass, but the next one that came along was also an open one, which she was obliged to take. The company has been running some open cars for several days, and the weather has been such part of the time as to make this agreeable to the public, notwithstanding that it is contrary to the city ordinance, but it is hardly spring-like enough yet to make such cars pleasant on foggy mornings or in the evenings. The company probably has some good reason for running these cars at this season, but it will hardly satisfy people who are recovering from la grippe.
